Welcome to Sociology 225F! This class will expose graduate students to an exciting range of intellectual debates under the broad topic of “Comparing States and Markets.” During the course of the semester, we will cover “The Institutional Bases of Markets,” “Popular Uprisings, Disruptions and Mobilization,” and “Welfare State Formation and Dynamics.” In the process, we will engage a multi-disciplinary set of literatures that converge around economic sociology, political sociology, the sociology of work, and comparative historical sociology. Further, the class will take us on an intellectual tour of the world’s regions and their complex social processes and problems and their connections and disconnections with the global economy. Among the goals I have for this course, I aim to: i) develop students’ analytical and writing skills; ii) augment students’ theoretical depth and understanding; iii) expand students’ scholarly knowledge of these diverse but coherent fields, and iv) engage students’ with a rich and exciting set of intellectual debates.

EVALUATION:

Students will be graded on three exams and class participation. The exams will be take-home exams and will involve students answering 2-3 essay questions in a total of about 10 pages. Though class material and learning cumulatively build over the semester, the exams will largely be non-cumulative. Students will typically have one week to complete the exam. The exams will be evaluated for professional writing skills, conceptual and theoretical depth, mastery of the material, creativity and analytic rigor.

Active class participation can take a variety of forms, including enthusiastic and intellectually rigorous discussion, email correspondence with the class and/or professor, and regular class attendance. In addition, one student will be responsible each week for suggesting discussion questions. The composition of final grades and grading scale are as follows:

Exam 1	20%
Exam 2	25%
Exam 3	30%
Class Participation	25%

As an alternative, I will allow students with a mature research idea to write a research paper in exchange for the second and third exam. The research paper should be an original piece of professional social scientific scholarship that is closely related to this course’s subject matter. Such students must get approval for this early in the semester. Though students can cancel plans to do a research paper, students cannot choose later in the semester to do a research paper.

I do not give incomplete grades, except under extreme circumstances. In the case an incomplete is warranted, you should contact me before the exam is due.

READINGS:

- Students will want to purchase or borrow the following books:
- Evans, Peter. 1995. Embedded Autonomy: States and Industrial Transformation Princeton, N.J.: Princeton University Press.
- Migdal, Joel S. 1988. Strong Societies and Weak States: State-Society Relations and State Capabilities in the Third World Princeton, N.J.: Princeton University Press.

The remaining readings will be available as reserve photocopies or on one of the university library's electronic databases (e.g. JSTOR, Proquest, etc.). Students should read the CORE readings prior to each class meeting. Students are responsible for the core readings only for each exam. The supplementary readings are simply a suggested resource for those interested in researching the topic, teaching in this area and/or taking a qualifying exam in a related specialization. In general, students should read the readings in the order they are listed.
